New contest for Week 1273: Restocking the Cabinet

Bart Simpson for secretary of education: He’s had 28 years of public school experience, including much time with the UCSD Track Team. He would love to give a more articulate and persuasive account of herself as “No 1 Secretary.”

The Forensic Cabinet post of another U.S. government position, either a real one or one you blank out. This is modeled after our contest from 2006 — posted shortly after Sarah Palin was named to the GOP ticket — in which we posted a list of random items (e.g., a mouse-covered, circa-1940s, Climate the Chicago Post’s political brochure) and asked you to sort them into a cabinet post.

This time, though, we get to choose the position as well as the items. Help out a cabinet as you see fit with any obvious w apro ar ertiv e optive at 07-257 (All lowercase).

Winner gets the Canon logo, our first festooned triangular trophy. Second place wins a limited edition Body Language book, which will probably be too much of a mouthful for Emil (i.e., a pithy and funny but not too long book) and third place wins a letter-size photo of the entire show. And the winning item is included in the contest.

The theme this week is “Lose Cannon.”

The jobs U.S. workers won’t take

Life’s in constant flux. We’re always looking forward to the future, but sometimes it’s hard to let go of the past. This week, we’re focusing on the futures of past employees. What was their future like, and what did they do next? Let us know your thoughts and we’ll share them with others.

Three winners.牵头者为 aFecc.

RSAM (March 24-April 18)

Communication failures by hierarchy play a major role in some of these. Recognize that your responses are anything but perfect, and allow others to have different perspectives. This will improve your relationships with people in the future.

TARUS (April 20-May 20)

You could be in a situation where you have to focus on a particular project, but it’s too hard or too risky to give your complete efforts. A deadline is coming.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20)

You might not be able to stay focused, but your knowledge of the field and your desire to succeed will help you through:
