

Not Depravda
A tiny subsidiary of Depravda
Hardly noticeable, really

[REDACTED]

[REDACTED]

- After only one month, or possibly more, of the First Annual Style Invitational Hiatus, Chuck Smith has begun an unprecedented, unexplainable, and precipitous plummet down through the rankings. "I can't explain it," Chuck said to his bartender. "Sure, I'm not getting ink, but neither is anyone else."
- Week Three-hundred-and-nifty-pink was almost won by Jonathan Paul, whose entry was buried in the Wednesday Style Excavational, except he accidentally signed his name "Barbara Collier". Fortunately for him, his wife alertly sent in the same entry, signing it "Jonathan Paul".
- Week Three-hundred-and-oofy-oo was claimed by Kitty Thuermer, but she was not allowed possession as her claim ticket was clearly marked "Travel". "I can't believe they overrule me on something so trivial," she was heard to say by her bartender. As a result, the Week is still trundling forlornly around the conveyer belt in baggage claim.
- Yvonne Easter Driggers, finding the prize donation category to be suddenly very competitive, is trying to recapture her winning formula by strapping a king crab trap to her motor home whilst traversing Alaska on the Internet. "I don't know if this will work or not," she e-mailed to her bartender. "Do you know where I can get a tsar crab trap?"
- With all the losers ahead of him sitting still, Dave Zarrow leaped at his opportunity to move up in the rankings, passing several Losers before being pulled over by the police for failing to use his directional signal while changing lanes, and for driving on the sidewalk.
- Domainatrix Sandra Hull has decided to change her name to Sandra Hull Day O'Connor in order to appease her customers who have been complaining about "not getting any justice". She has been pondering a further change to Sandra Hull O'Day in order to get more paid time off from her day job.
- Little has been heard from Sylvia Plath Gordon since she got a new house, even if we have no idea when that was. Sources say this is due to the care required to squeeze her car into her newly purchased garage, not realizing that was, in fact, a Bell Jar.
- Jennifer Hart, Stephen Dudzik, and Jennifer Hart have announced that they will merge to form the first multi-state corporation in the Losing industry. The merger, in which they will be joined at the hits, will feature a stock joke swap and will make them the largest entity (hit-wise) in the nation.
- Don Maclean has probably heard enough "American Pie" jokes in his life, and doesn't need another one here.
- Sarah W. "Gaymon" is trying to revive her lagging career by luring as many high-performing Losers as possible to a remote field in Delaware, where they will be bombarded with pumpkins.
- Little does Jennifer Hart suspect, but the map of Antarctica supplied to her by Greg Arnold is slightly out of date, not including much of the suburban sprawl that has occurred recently, and omitting the new downtown stadium and convention center. Greg moved away years ago, but he shrewdly kept his key real estate holdings, whose values have been skyrocketing with all the new development.
- Kelli Midgely-Biggs was a resounding success in the NFL chat rooms recently discussing impressionist painting and its relationship to blitzing linebackers with the Czar, at least until being muzzled. "Mmph mmph mmmph. Mmmmmph!" she explained to her bartender.
- Jean Sorensen managed to slip by Joseph Romm by convincing him that it was good for the environment.
- For the first time, every one of the Top 100 appeared on Page F2:

NEXT BRUNCH

Dear Editor,

I can't help but notice a significant decrease in the kquality of Depravda since the previous publisher/editor has been sacked. I don't know why you people pitched him - that guy really seemed to have his shit together - and tried to overhaul what was a finely tuned publishing machine I demand to be amused by Depravda and insist that you ratchet the humor up several notches immediately. You grace period is over sonny, now get to work.

Sincerely,

Onjay Ammerkay

NOV 14

SUNDAY

CHEE VERREY